Picking up where Light Green Leaves (KLP139cd, K Records) took us, Harvest Joy is a record full of soul vibrations coming through many different Kyle Field voices concerning birth, life, death and rebirth. Set within a peninsula forest scene, the characters sing and yarrlll their way through sweeeeeping attempts to capture the essence of the forest floor, one twig at a time. Mined from summer and fall notebooks, these new works project a different feeling than any that came before. Harvest Joy creates a sense of private space being exposed multiple times, so that the picture is painted again and again from different depths and varying distances. It 's an echoey space —like voices inside a room of auditory mirrors singing out in order to make sense of its inner world.

Recorded by Matt Remine in the wooded area of Port Angeles, Washington, the batch of songs comprising Harvest Joy grew over one week, tracking the whole album "live" from beginning to end, one track at a time. This is an adventuresome journey of tape and song. Ah yes, adventure. Out of a land that modern singers forgot comes this timeless young Sasquatch, singing as if no one is listening and making some of the most instantly genuine songs heard. The listener will be waiting for the punch line, but there is none. This is it —not ironic, sneaky, or anything of the sort. It is Lee Baggett of Avila Beach, California. These songs of October Sketches are sung from the back of a meadow, so lean in and hear what going on around you because the meadow speaks. In fact, this is the very same meadow Lee has been carrying with him since the age of thirteen (and we even have the photo to prove it).

Recorded at the Birdnest in Portland (think Bobby Birdman, Little Wings, The Graves, Adam Forkner of [VVRSSNN] and Yume Bitsu to start) by Greg Olin of The Graves, October Sketches has a warm production that provides the perfect backdrop for Lee 's glowing gems. Honest and to the point. Releasing October Sketches with Harvest Joy makes perfect sense to us; they were both recorded in the fall of 2002 by our good friends. They belong together.
